The Ultimate Direct Mail Marketing Guide

Proven tips and techniques you can use today

It's simply getting harder and harder to break through the clutter and get people to respond to your call to action. According to current research, each of us is exposed to more than 5,000 messages per day. Of those, we only remember about four. And we don't even remember those for very long. A large portion of those messages are coming through channels, media and devices that didn't even exist 30 years ago. In fact, the Kiplinger Letter reports that today companies have at least 60 ways to reach customers.

Why Use Direct Mail?

It works. Even in today's digital world, people like getting mail. While we might be overwhelmed with the volume of mail in our digital inbox, printed mail gives us something to touch, hold and peruse at our leisure.

In fact, going to the mailbox to discover what's inside is a daily ritual for most of us. Whether it's a catalog, a discount offer from a favourite restaurant or an invitation to a fundraising event, mail fills an intrinsic human need. That's what makes it so powerful – and why direct mail continues to be an extremely effective way to generate leads – and sales.

Direct Mail Delivers When Compared to Digital

Direct mail drives consumer response when measured against digital alternatives, per the DMA Response Rate Report, Direct Marketing Association, 2015. Of course, the most effective efforts incorporate several different types of media in a cross-channel campaign.

Direct Mail Outperforms Digital in Five Other Important Ways

Per Canada Post/True Impact Marketing's Understanding the Impact of Physical Communications through Neuroscience published in 2015, direct marketing provides:

1. Greater Brand Recall

Consumers who received offline direct mail advertisements were able to recall brands and/or offers 75% of the time, vs. 44% for digital formats.

2. Easier Communications

Direct mail advertisements take 21% less cognitive effort to process compared to the same ads on digital media.

3. Higher Response

Direct mail is 20% more motivating than digital media.

4. Faster Processing

Direct mail is visually processed in less time than digital media; messages are delivered faster.

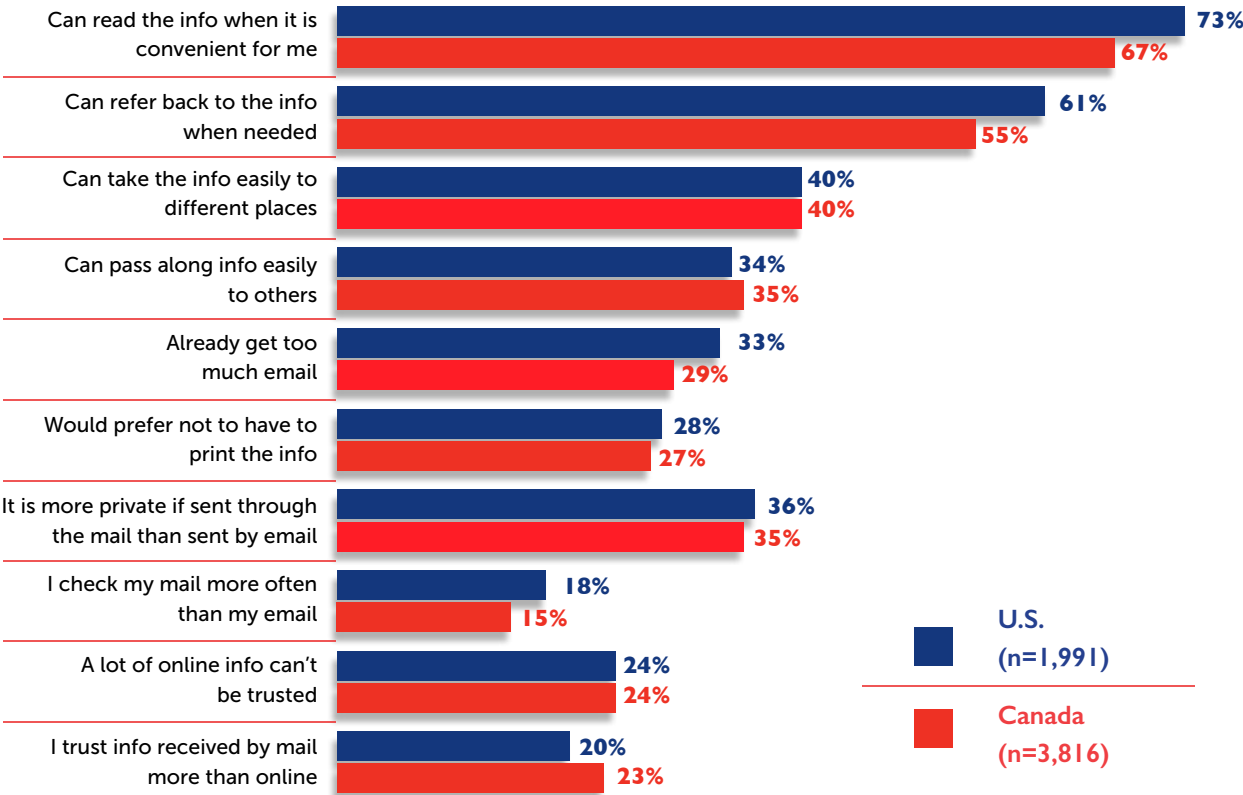

5. More Likelihood of Action

Direct mail surpasses the important motivation-to-cognitive load threshold of 1, meaning it's more likely to drive action than digital media.

It's All About Preference

Research from Epsilon on North American consumer preferences shows that direct mail continues to be a preferred marketing channel for Americans and Canadians alike. More than that, it proves that people like getting direct mail.

The Secret to Direct Mail Success

Some people have devoted their entire lives to direct mail. Over the years, these direct mail experts have discovered the secrets to direct mail success. They know all the tips and techniques for squeezing out more response to their direct mail and getting more return on their marketing spend.

What's their secret? It's really no secret at all. Just consistently follow the rules (or know when to break them) and make incremental improvements to continually increase response with each new effort. Anyone can achieve the same results. You can too, by taking a logical approach and following tried-and-true, simple-to-implement methods. Read on for more tips that will help you create direct mail campaigns that make it easier for recipients to respond than do nothing at all.

Avoid the Biggest Mistake in Direct Mail

(Hint: It's all about targeting)

The biggest mistake businesses make with direct mail is confusing it with advertising. Direct mail is too powerful (and too costly) a medium to waste on brand awareness. For success in direct mail, it's essential that you apply the principles of direct response communications. That means targeting people or businesses most likely to respond to your message with an offer they can't refuse.

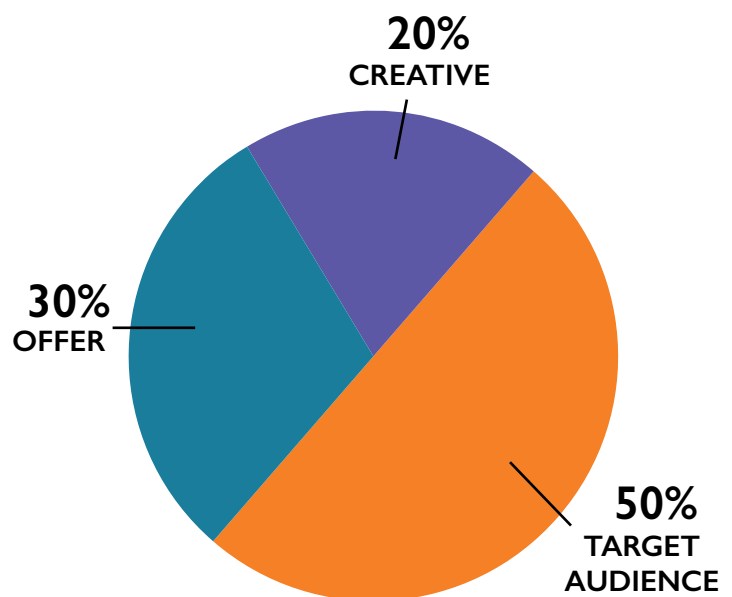

While you might think the copy and art are critical to the success of your campaign, in fact it's the target audience and the offer that are responsible for the bulk (80%) of your results. So, before you worry about your font size and the colour of your envelope, be sure you spend sufficient time on audience selection and offer development. This is where much of your leverage lies.

The 3 Elements of Direct Mail

Each of these elements of a direct mail campaign has an essential role to play, but the three elements are not equally important.

1. THE TARGET AUDIENCE – selecting the most likely prospects for the campaign
2. THE OFFER – the motivator that drives the response
3. THE CREATIVE – the copy, design and communications format that delivers the offer in a clear and compelling way

Not All Elements are Created Equal

Are You Talking to the Right People?

If you're not talking to the right person, then nothing you can say or do will be effective. Most direct marketers select audiences based on a combination of two factors: what they've done (behaviour) and who they are (demographics). Of these two, behavioural characteristics will always be the more powerful predictors of response.

But sometimes, when the data is not available, direct marketers are forced to rely on audience selection based on demographic factors, like age, income and gender, or business type and size; as well as geographic location. The ideal approach is to combine the two – find prospects with demographic characteristics similar to your best customers who have also responded to you or to someone else in the past.

List Fundamentals

Direct mail lists vary widely in their responsiveness, ranked in the following order:

1. Your own database, known as your "house file." These are the customers and inquirers with whom you have a prior relationship, and they are 5-10 times more likely to respond to your campaign than any other list.
2. Response lists. These are people who have responded to some other marketer, like magazine subscribers, event attendees, charitable donors or mail order buyers. These lists will respond at 3-5 times the rate of compiled lists.
3. Compiled lists. These are names of prospects that have been culled from telephone directories, government records or other sources. Compiled names respond at somewhat lower levels than the first two categories, but they can still be effective when an appropriate offer is made, and they offer the advantage of wider market coverage.

Tips for Building Your Database

As you build your marketing list, look for ways to collect information beyond the basic address that allows you to contact them to continue the dialogue. Supplement your list with sales/purchase data from your own systems to understand who your best customers are (so you can find more like them).

For B2C organizations, enhance your customer data by collecting the following:

- Email address
- Birthday
- Hobbies
- Anniversary of when they first started doing business with you
- Gender
- Age
- Marital status
- Family data (kids, pets, etc.)
- Household income (HHI)
- Occupation
- What they have bought
- When they purchased (how often they purchase)

B2B organizations can enhance data with:

- SIC (Standard Industrial Classification) or NAICS (North American Industry Classification System) code
 - Size of firm
 - Revenues
 - Number of employees
 - Communications history
 - Response to your marketing programs
 - Source of inquiry or order
 - Date and purchase details of first inquiry or order
 - Recency, frequency and purchase history by date, dollar amount, or product
 - Additional decision makers
- Many data vendors offer append services that allow you to obtain some of this value-added information that can be used for future targeting.

Spotlight on Canada Post's Neighbourhood Mail™

Neighbourhood Mail from Canada Post lets you blanket the areas where your best prospects and customers live or work with powerful marketing messages. You enjoy creative flexibility in the format of your mailers – postcards, envelope packages, brochures and product samples – plus avoid the typical fees that come with mailing list purchases or rentals.

Neighbourhood Mail is ideal for companies and organizations that do business locally, like home service providers, auto repair shops, restaurants, medical and legal professionals and more!

Make Them an Offer They Can't Refuse

The job of your offer is to motivate the respondent to take action. Without a compelling reason to respond, your target is most likely going to do nothing. A great offer has high perceived value to the prospect. This does not necessarily mean it costs you much to give, but that your target thinks it's valuable. It is simple, easy to explain and can be grasped quickly.

An effective offer is delivered with a sense of urgency. You can create urgency by limiting the time or the number available to stimulate an immediate response. It appeals to your target audience, but is not so generous as to attract an unqualified, unprofitable customer.

Develop offer strategies by talking to your sales people and your customer service reps and by keeping an eye on your competition.

How to Make Them Stop and Take Notice

Over years of testing and refinement, the rules of direct marketing copy and design have emerged. Break these rules at your peril.

Rule 1. Copy trumps art. Direct marketing is more about selling and less about creating an impression or being memorable. So, great direct marketing communications focus on persuasive copy. The role of the illustrations and design is to deliver the message clearly.

Rule 2. Use a friendly, me-to-you tone. Avoid formality. Avoid jargon. Write the way you speak. This is not mass advertising. This is one person talking to another. What is the most powerful word in direct marketing copy? "You."

Rule 3. Keep it clear and simple. Focus on only one thing. Sell the offer, not the product. Don't introduce choice into your offer. Don't try to sell two ideas at once. You confuse, you lose.

Rule 4. Be credible. People won't respond to someone they don't trust. So your offer must be believable. And your messaging must be warm and personable. Eliminate risk by adding testimonials and guarantees.

Rule 5. Stress the benefits versus the features. Explain why the customer should care. "What's in it for me?" Don't talk so much about the product per se. Talk about what it can do for the customer.

Add Personalization, Add Relevancy

Digital printing and variable data technologies have revolutionized direct mail in recent years. They allow marketers to create direct mail campaigns that communicate on a one-to-one basis with every single prospect or customer. These techniques promise to become even more effective as marketers become more adept at collecting pertinent information on customers and prospects. Based on what you know about your customers or prospects, the ability to customize and personalize your message becomes almost limitless. Here are just a few of the direct mail components that can be customized for each customer through variable printing:

NAME. Connect with customers by using their name or company name in communications.

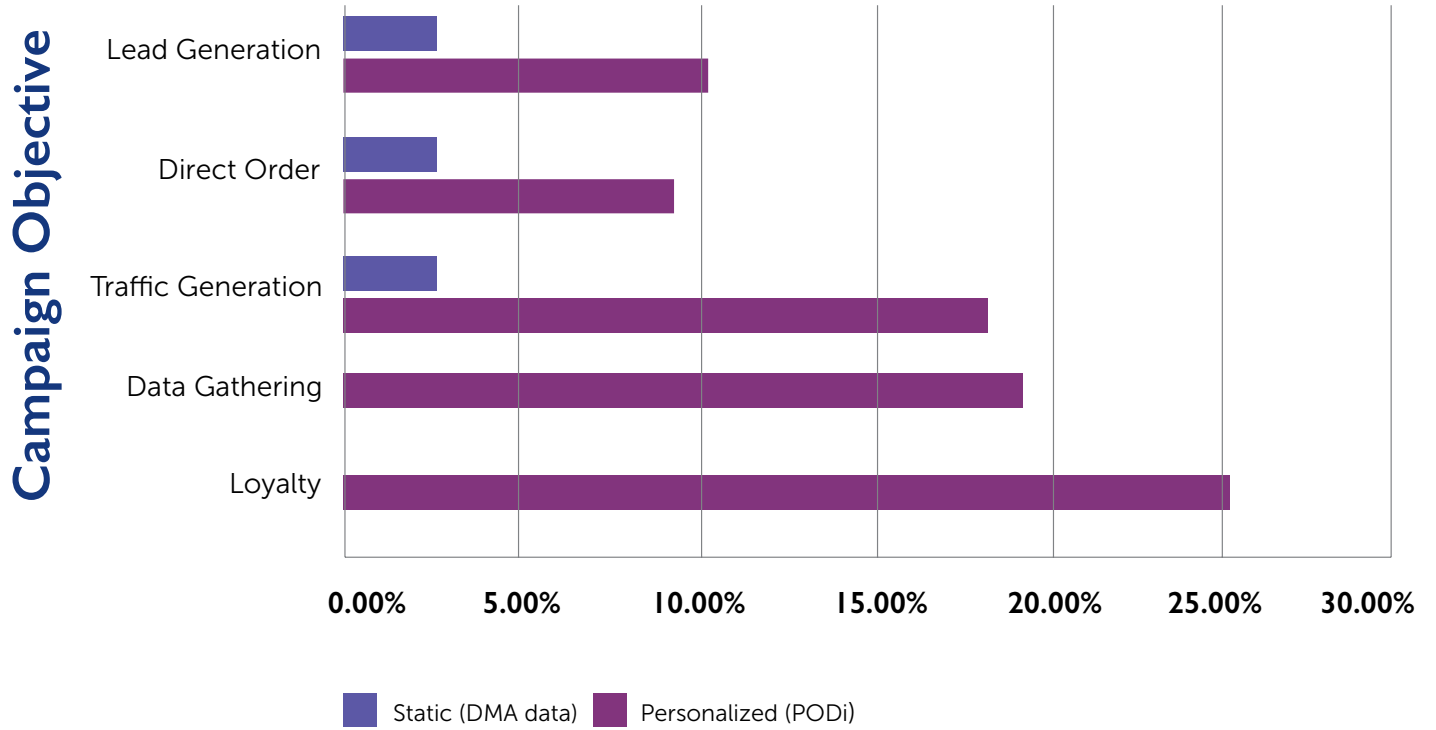

OFFER. Change the offer based on past purchases or other information you know about the recipient.

PERSONALIZED QR CODES & URLS. Use personalized response mechanisms for intrigue and continuity.

VISUALS. Vary images based on the prospect's age, gender or interests.

Yes, You Can Go Cross-Channel

The term is cross-channel marketing and the simple definition is this: communicating with customers and prospects using multiple forms of media to present the same integrated message across a single campaign, all while tracking results in real time. A cross-channel campaign typically includes a direct mail component and a digital strategy like email. The addition of a personalized landing page, or PURL, enhances one-to-one communication.

According to Canada Post in 2016's Connecting for Action, integrated campaigns that include direct mail elicit greater consumer attention and better provoke the emotional engagement and brand recall that drive action than single-media digital campaigns. Specifically integrated direct mail and digital campaigns:

- Elicit 39% more attention (time spent) than single-media digital campaigns.
- Trigger 5% more emotional intensity than single-media digital campaigns.
- Achieve 10% higher brand recall than single-media digital campaigns.

The effectiveness and timelessness of a cross-channel approach are well-established and widely-used. If you think about it, the time-honoured sales process has many similarities to the basics of direct marketing:

1. Focus. Just one message directed to one individual at a time.
2. Personalization/Relevance. The content of the message is relevant to the particular needs and wants of the receiver.
3. Media Integration. The particular strengths of each medium – the letter, the phone call, the sales presentation – are integrated and used to maximize effectiveness. When combined, the precision targeting, high readership and personalization of direct mail, the immediacy and connectivity of a phone call and the interactive nature of a personal sales meeting create the ideal opportunity to gain the attention, stimulate the interest, build the desire and motivate the buyer to action.
4. Interactivity. Enabling two-way communication between the salesperson and the customer makes it possible to better understand the customer's needs and to reveal potential obstacles in the sales process. As a result, the sales presentation can be more specific and relevant, and obstacles can be uncovered and addressed.

Re-engineer for Rapid Response

The easier you make it to respond, the more likely they will respond. Always offer recipients more than one way to respond so they can choose the method that they prefer, whether that's by phone, mail, email or visiting a website. And with the proliferation of smartphones and tablet computers, you'll want to ensure they have the same Web experience on mobile devices as they do on desktop computers.

Marketers today can also take advantage of new response mechanisms that offer enhanced tracking and opportunities to gather additional information on customer wants, needs and communication preferences.

Rapid Response Mechanisms

QR Codes

A QR Code (Quick Response Code) is a type of two-dimensional code first designed for the automotive industry. In the smartphone era, QR codes represent an opportunity for marketers to tie print communications with online content. It offers a fun and fast way for prospects and customers to engage, interact and respond.

Consumers are Quick to Respond

Per the research firm Catalyst, a 2014 study showed that 55% of Canadians owned a smartphone. In 2015, the penetration rate grew to 68%, representing a year-over-year growth of 24%.

Regarding QR use, an examination in 2016 of just one industry segment by Statistica revealed this usage of scanned food QR codes among consumers in Canada. People reported using QR codes to:

Personalized URLs

A personalized URL (PURL) is a unique Web address that directs recipients to a landing page designed specifically for them. Images, messages and offers can be varied for each recipient based on what you know about them. The goal of your PURL is to provide each customer with more complete and relevant information, while excluding content which is not relevant to their needs. Benefits of using personalized landing pages include:

- Increased response
- Higher conversion rates
- Ability to track and measure response
- Capture of additional prospect information
- Cross-channel integration
- More cost-effective ways to add campaign relevance

Variable Maps

Including variable maps boost response by literally showing customers and prospects the way to a location or event. Route maps can take recipients from their front door to a store location, dealership, fundraising event or the route from one location to another. Custom proximity maps display single or multiple locations within a radius. They're used by manufacturers to direct potential buyers to local-area retailers that carry a specific product. Banks use them to identify one or more locations within driving or walking distance of the recipient.

If You Can't Measure It, You Can't Manage It

One of the biggest reasons for a direct mail campaign's failure is the inability to measure success. According to research from the Kellogg School of Management at Northwestern University, 57% of marketers don't use a centralized database to track and analyze campaigns. Even worse, 82% never track and monitor marketing campaigns and assets using automated software, such as marketing resource management (MRM).

If you don't track results, there is no way to know if the campaigns are profitable and if you are wisely investing marketing dollars. From the very start of campaign development, you need to establish a process for tracking results. By putting a plan in place before campaign launch, you can ensure all of the leads are properly tracked and can be easily accessed and integrated into your reporting.

Start by determining your campaign objectives. Do you want to generate leads? Make sales? Drive traffic to your store or website? Once you understand your goals, you can incorporate tracking mechanisms to measure response.

Tips: What to Measure

Response rate. How many people did something as a result of your campaign?

Sales. How many sales did you make as a result of this campaign? (Be sure to measure against each call-to-action included in your campaign – 800 number, website, reply card, etc.)

Change in behaviour. Were you successful in driving people to more efficient and less costly channels, a website vs. a call center? What are your savings?

Information. Were you able to capture updated or additional information from prospects and customers that will help you with future marketing efforts?

Tracking Mechanisms to Try:

- Printed coupons or gift cards
- Unique campaign URL or personalized URLs
- Tracking codes placed on reply cards or envelopes
- Promotion codes that can be used online or by phone
- Special toll-free numbers set up for specific mailings
- Email addresses created for each campaign
- Digital response like downloads and website visitors

Test ‘til You Get It Right

The true secret to direct marketing success is continuous testing and improvement. Testing helps you identify the strongest lists, the most powerful offers and the most compelling copy and design treatments for your direct mail. Plus, testing allows you to find out what works in the marketplace based on a minimal marketing investment.

Just be sure you test the most important variables first. List and offer testing is the best place to begin. Once you have made progress in that area, then you can test package formats and copy platforms.

Determine the size of the test. Your objective here is to ensure that the test provides “statistical significance,” meaning that the results from the test sample will be replicated when you mail again to the rest of the audience.

The benefits of testing are huge for direct marketers. You may be very surprised at how your market responds compared to what you expected. Once you have real market feedback, you can refine your mailing programs, and very quickly improve your response, lower costs and generate more business.

The Gilligan Effect

Too often, marketers implement a marketing campaign that doesn’t garner the expected result. But rather than optimizing the campaign by trying different offers, messaging or calls-to-action, the entire plan is scrapped in favor of a new one.

This phenomenon is what some marketers refer to as the Gilligan Effect. If you remember the old television show “Gilligan’s Island,” in each episode the castaways would come up with an elaborate plan to get off the island. And each week the plan would go awry because of some bumbling error committed by Gilligan. But rather than applying what they learned and adjusting accordingly, the next week there would be a brand new, equally elaborate plan. Like the castaways, marketers who subscribe to this approach will never get where they want to go.

Elements to Test

Test the items one at a time to find out what works and what doesn’t (cause and effect).

- The list
- The offer
- Headlines
- Call-to-action
- Images
- Colour
- Format
- Timing

Follow up and Follow Through

They responded to your offer. Now what? Even as you're planning your direct mail campaign, create a process for tracking and handling inquiries. Who will take phone calls? How will you update your database to keep track of who responded and who didn't? What follow-up action needs to happen for those who responded – and those who didn't?

It's equally important to keep your staff up to speed on all your marketing efforts. Before you launch a new campaign, be sure to communicate the plan to everyone in your company. Give each person – the sales people, customer service reps, receptionists, store personnel, dealers and resellers – a copy of the mail piece. Make sure they know what the offer is and the procedures for tracking and fulfilling the offer in a timely fashion.

Follow up: Timing Matters

A Lead Management Response study conducted by Insidesales.com with the help of an MIT professor pondered the question: When should companies call Web-generated leads for optimal contact and qualification ratios? The results yielded some interesting findings related to speed and timing when responding to Web-generated leads:

Lead Management Response Study

Best Days to call	Wednesdays and Thursdays are the best days to call in order to contact (by 49.7% over the worst day, Tuesday) and qualify (by 24.9% over the worst day, Friday) leads. Thursday is the best day to contact a lead in order to qualify that lead (by 19.1% better than the worst day, Friday).
Best Times to call	4 to 6 pm is the best time to call to make contact with a lead (by 114% over the worst time block, 11 am-noon). 8-9 am and 4-5 pm are the best times to call to qualify a lead (by 164% better than 1-2 pm, the worst time of the day). 4-5 pm is the best time to contact a lead to qualify (109% better than 11 am-noon).
Odds of calling in the first hour	The odds of calling to contact a lead decrease by over 10 times in the 1st hour. The odds of calling to qualify a lead decrease by over 6 times in the 1st hour. After 20 hours every additional dial your salespeople make actually hurts your ability to make contact to qualify a lead.
Odds of calling in 5 minutes	The odds of contacting a lead if called in 5 minutes versus 30 minutes drop 100 times. The odds of qualifying a lead if called in 5 minutes versus 30 minutes drop 21 times.

Keep the Conversation Going

It's equally important to develop a communications plan for keeping in touch with your contacts. Here are just a few ways you can keep the conversation going with prospects and customers.

- Triggered emails – birthday, anniversary, purchase
- Printed newsletters
- e-Newsletters
- Monthly offer emails
- Invitations to “Like Us” on Facebook or “Follow us” on Twitter
- Holiday greeting cards
- Seasonal offers
- Loyalty programs
- Surveys

Ways to Improve Response

- Make a strong call-to-action: Click here! Call now!
- Eliminate barriers to response: Use Business Reply Mail and provide a toll-free phone number.
- Make it easy to respond: Pre-populated order form, perforated response card.
- State your offer prominently and frequently.
- Add a guarantee.
- Include testimonials.
- Follow up your mail with a phone call or an email.
- Use a P.S. in your letter to restate your offer and your call-to-action. This is the second-most viewed section of a letter. (The first is the salutation.)
- Use a Johnson Box, which is a block of copy positioned above the salutation in your letter where you can grab attention and persuade people to keep reading.

Happy Customers Tell Their Friends

The best way to get a referral is to ask for it. Sounds simple doesn't it? Yet, many businesses either neglect or forget to ask. Incorporating refer-a-friend requests into every direct marketing communication offers an extremely cost-effective way to find new customers and build your direct mail list.

The Power of Referral

- 76% of all economic activity is influenced by personal recommendations (eMarketer)
- 9 out of 10 people trust the recommendations of a friend while only 1 in 10 trust traditional advertising (Forrester Research)
- The average value of a referred customer is at least 16% higher than a non-referred customer (Goethe University)

Do You Have a Friend?

You've given them a great offer in your direct mail – and they've taken you up on it. Now is the time to ask if they have friends, family or business associates who would also be interested in receiving that same offer. Try adding refer-a-friend forms to:

- Newsletters
- Contests
- Catalogs
- Sweepstakes
- Direct mail offers
- Giveaways

Why Use a Loyalty Program?

Loyalty programs, sometimes called continuity programs, provide a systematic approach to cross-selling services and gaining referrals from new clients – all while improving customer loyalty and satisfaction.

Through carefully timed, personalized mailings, these programs allow for multiple points of contact, allowing you to move customer relationships forward in a friendly, non-threatening way. And by incorporating regular satisfaction surveys, you can collect valuable information about customers' future needs while keeping your company name top of mind.

Implementing a Loyalty Program Offers Continual Opportunities to:

- Build and maintain customer relationships
- Encourage referrals
- Increase customer loyalty and satisfaction
- Increase share-of-wallet
- Learn more about customer needs
- Use additional customer data to generate revenue
- Retain existing customers
- Maximize customer lifetime value

Summary

When considering direct mail among your marketing options, remember these benefits as summarized by Canada Post in Breaking Through the Noise, 2015.

Direct mail...

1 Inspires: It's so engrained in life that consumers ritualize it. In the process, they imbue it with emotionally charged meaning, making them more susceptible to inspiration from brands.

2 Gets noticed: Consumers are far more likely to notice, open, read and enjoy direct mail than digital forms of advertising. They consider it less intrusive, more memorable and the best way to make them feel valued.

3 Persists: Consumers keep mail, display it in highly visible areas of their homes, and even share it with others. This creates multiple opportunities for a brand to be seen and engaged with.

4 Persuades: Whether it's to drive a store visit or purchase, mail delivers a call-to-action that resonates.

Where Does a Marketer Begin?

Managing all of the components of a successful marketing campaign can be time consuming. Using multiple resources or an agency can be cost-prohibitive. Relying on freelancers is often inefficient. The most effective use of your staff, time and dollars is found in consolidating your program with a single source to develop, produce and deliver your marketing programs.

Why Choose KKP?

KKP is locally-owned and operated. Our focus is on small and mid-sized businesses and organizations that need marketing services and print-related communications.

We specialize in direct mail and cross-media campaigns, but also customer/donor communications, special events support and brand identity – whatever it takes to make an enterprise like yours not just survive but thrive.

Beginning with strategy, we'll work with you to determine if direct mail – or a combination of other channels – makes sense for your business or organization. Then we'll precisely define your target audience to ensure your communications achieve maximum impact with minimal waste. Taking a concept to creation is the next critical step. We know how to develop and design marketing materials that drive results – all within your budget and timeline.

Of course, we all know a great marketing campaign will fall flat on its face if it doesn't get into the hands of the right people at the right time. That's where our mailing expertise comes into play. Our experts stay current with postal regulations and requirements, which means increased efficiencies and postage savings for you.
